In a way we can—because cars and trucks that run on natural gas reduce the emissions that cause smog by 80%—and virtually eliminate soot.

The fact is, natural gas is the cleanest burning alternative fuel available today.

And the least expensive.

30% less expensive per mile than gasoline.

Because it's so clean, natural gas also cuts maintenance costs. Oil changes and tune-ups are cut in half, and there is less engine wear.

Small wonder that there are thousands of natural gas cars and trucks on America's roads today.

With more being built by Chrysler, Ford, and General Motors every day.

If all fleet owners—companies and communities—across the country would switch to natural gas as they replace cars and trucks, it would really make a difference in our air.

A breathtaking difference

Testing to Florida standards requires that each window or skylight specimen withstand the impact of an 8' long wood 2 x 4 fired from an air cannon at 34 mph. EXTECH has voluntarily tested to impacts up to 75 mph.

Conventional curtainwalls, windows or skylights can qualify for Dade County acceptance if protected by an EXTECH system (inside or outside) . . . Ask us how!

EXTECH offers hurricane protection for windows, glazed walls and skylights. Polycarbonate glazing systems resist hurricane force winds and the impact of flying missiles. Several of EXTECH'S protective systems have passed the Large Missile Impact Test and the Cyclic Pressure Test as required by Dade County.

EXTECH also manufactures state-of-the-art window and skylight systems for industrial and security applications. High-strength glazings and gasketed heavy-duty aluminum frames offer impact resistance, energy savings, and natural light and ventilation. Select from top-hinged, sliding, or fixed styles.

For the second year, AIA Florida has produced a firm directory which merges with Florida Architect magazine. The resulting publication becomes a valuable resource in a variety of ways. Florida architectural firms who designed projects receiving the 1994 Awards for Excellence in Architecture are featured in the front section. These projects act as lightening rods to enhance public awareness of architecture and the impact the profession is having on our environment.

An informational document, the directory can stand on its own as a resource tool with a year long shelf life. The directory provides a profile of architectural firms throughout the state. Because this directory is the only publication that provides such information, it is an excellent resource for public agencies, developers, and anyone else who is interested in finding an architect.

Longtime members of AIA Florida use the directory to network with other architects. In the section on "Areas of Practice," firms are listed by fields of specialty and chapter affiliation. This year, as a result of repeated requests, there is an alphabetized listing of AIA members by their last name with firm, city, and phone information included. This list is an invaluable cross-referencing tool.

Allied professionals use the directory to find architects for joint ventures. Vendors are listed in the Products and Services section as an easy reference for architects. Viewing the directory as a multifaceted resource acknowledges the interlocking web of alliances which serve to strengthen individuals and groups in their economic and professional associations. Continual efforts are made to keep the information contained in the directory current and correct. All data reflects responses from firms as of last summer, and membership status reflects records as of December 1, 1994.

What is to come in 1995? Florida Architect magazine is adopting a thematic approach to its quarterly issues. Next year's themes include: Technology - a review of the newest technology aimed at the design profession; Historic Preservation / Restoration - noting the Sesquicentennial of Florida's statehood and the impact architecture has had on communities around the state; The Caribbean - focusing on that area's influence of design in our region; and the 1995 Awards for Excellence in Architecture. Projects and articles that reflect these themes are welcomed to be considered for publication. The directory in 1995 will be published separately from the magazine.

The focus on the year ahead will emphasize making and marking the changes required to keep architects and the public informed about the profession and our built environment. We are looking forward to a year of revitalization for the magazine and we look forward to hearing from you. JB

Further Thoughts On Professional Malpractice Liability

The Florida Supreme Court's Recent Decision In Casa Clara Condominium Association, Inc. v. Charley Toppino and Sons, Inc.

by Robert Alfert, Jr., Esq., Assoc. AIA

Malpractice liability, on account of the exponential increase in negligence suits and corresponding escalation of professional liability insurance premiums, is unequivocally the paramount issue confronting professionals today. Architects are no exception to the rule. In the Winter 1993 edition of Florida Architect, my colleague David Tegeler, AIA, Esquire, brought refreshing news to architects in his article discussing the recent Florida Supreme Court decision in Casa Clara Condominium Association, Inc. v. Charley Toppino and Sons, Inc., 620 So. 2d 1244 (Fla. 1993). The Casa Clara decision has been heavily touted by various commentators as narrowly defining the scope of negligence liability for architects. Unfortunately, various recent appellate decisions construing the Casa Clara decision have illustrated that some negligence claims may still exist against an architect or other design professionals for negligence in the performance of their duties.

The controversial debate underlying professional malpractice liability surrounds a technical legal doctrine referred to as the "economic loss rule." Simply stated, the economic loss rule bars recovery for purely economic losses rather than redress for personal injury or damage to other property outside the scope of the parties' relationship. The policy is grounded in a fine, but often blurred, distinction between contract law and tort (or civil wrong) law: Disappointed economic expectations (for example, lost profits or delay damages) are properly addressed pursuant to the law of contract; whereas tort law is designed to protect society's interest in being free from harm.

The Florida Supreme Court reinforced the economic loss rule in the Casa Clara decision. The Court held that negligence claims seeking redress for purely economic losses must be brought under a contract theory. This ruling arguably shielded architects from liability for their negligence to those with whom they were not in a contractual relationship. In the standard architect-owner relationship, this ruling effectively precludes claims against the architect brought by, among others, general contractors, subcontractors and material suppliers. The only narrowly-defined exception to this ruling was the Supreme Court's refusal to overrule its earlier landmark decision in A.R. Moyer, Inc. v. Graham, 285 So. 2d 397 (Fla. 1973).

The decision in A.R. Moyer permitted a general contractor to sue a supervising architect under negligence (or tort) theory despite the fact that the claim sought recovery for purely economic losses. The Court clearly, though not necessarily convincingly as applied by today's standards, articulated its rationale:

Considerations of reason and policy impel the conclusion that the position and authority of a supervising architect are such that he ought to labor under a duty to the prime contractor to supervise the project with due care under the circumstances, even though his sole contractual relationship is with the owner ...

... Although too much control over the contractor necessarily rests in the hands of the supervising architect for him not to be placed under a duty imposed by law to perform without negligence his functions as they affect the contractor, the power of the architect to stop the work is tantamount to a power of economic life or death over the contractor. It is only just that such authority, exercised in such a relationship, carry commensurate legal responsibility.

The Court's subsequent decision in Casa Clara maintained A.R. Moyer's an exception to the economic loss rule, but the exception was narrowly defined.

The first post-Casa Clara appellate decision involving an architect's liability in negligence, Spancrete, Inc. v. Ronald E. Frazier & Associates, P.A., 630 So. 2d 1197 (Fla. 3d DCA 1994), construed the limitation literally. The appellate court recognized that A.R. Moyer was decided in the context of a "supervising" architect with the power to stop work and exercise some control over the contractor. The role of the architect in Spancrete was governed by the American Institute of Architects Document A201. Under that contract, the architect does not have the right to stop work; that power is reserved to the owner. Moreover, AIA Document A201 does not confer upon the architect supervisory responsibility over the contractor or subcontractors. Thus, the court opined that, since A.R. Moyer is to be strictly confined to its facts, the architect did not qualify as a supervisory architect within the meaning of A.R. Moyer.

It is not known whether the Spancrete Court's argument regarding the supervisory status of an architect will gain unanimous acceptance with the courts. Taken to its logical extreme, the argument suggests that an architect can never be held liable to a general contractor for economic losses unless the owner and the architect were governed by a contract which expressly vested in the architect the power to stop work and supervise the contractor. Arguably, the Supreme Court in Casa Clara did not intend such a result. Some commentators suggest that, as a practical matter, Spancrete means A.R. Moyer is dead. This view is premised on the fact that the standard AIA contract does not confer upon the architect supervisory responsibility. This view, however, glosses over the fact that many architects and other design professionals perform work without a written contract or use their own variant of the AIA contract which may or may not address the supervisory issue.

Contractual responsibilities aside, an architect may assume a supervisory role during the course of construction. It is not uncommon for architects, or other design professionals for that matter, to assume roles or duties extending beyond the four corners of their contract. Under such a factual scenario, it is not unlikely that a court would find the architect liable in a negligence action seeking recovery for purely economic losses.

The Spancrete decision, nevertheless, is a positive ruling for architects and other design professionals. The decision, however, also implicitly heralds a warning to architects against expanding, either expressly or implicitly, the scope of their contractual responsibilities and thereby increasing their potential liability.

Perhaps the most troubling development following Casa Clara is the very recent opinion by the Fifth District Court of Appeal in Southland Construction, Inc. v. The Richeson Corp., 19 Fla. L. Wkly. D1564 (Fla 5th DCA 1994), decided in July of 1994. In that case, Southland Construction hired The Richeson Corporation, an engineering firm headed by a professional licensed engineer, to design a retaining wall for an apartment complex. The engineer allegedly did not design the wall in accordance with professional engineering standards, and the wall "cracked and bulged." Southland Construction sustained significant economic losses related to the costs of reinforcing and repairing the wall.

Although the appellate court acknowledged the Casa Clara decision, it distinguished that the economic loss rule did not bar a negligence action against a professional where a client seeks recovery for economic losses caused by such professional's malpractice. The court specifically held:

The tort liability of professionals appears to vary according to the type of professional involved, and the court's public policy decisions as to who should be "foreseeable plaintiffs." As regards the tort liability of engineers, one who negligently performs a professional service, knowing that another will be injured if it is negligently performed, is liable in tort, even though there is no contract between the parties.

Notwithstanding the serious question as to the validity of this policy-driven decision, the decision may have haunting consequences on architects as well. It is not a stretch to suggest that the Southland Construction decision can easily and most likely will be applied to alleged malpractice by architects. The decision will also not be appealed to the Supreme Court. Unfortunately the case settled during the pendency of the appeal. Thus, the Southland Construction decision will carry persuasive value until challenged by another appellate court.

Architects need also be wary that negligent violations of applicable building codes may still form the basis for liability in tort for purely economic losses. Section 553.84 (1994) of the Florida Building Codes Act creates a right to sue for damages caused by violations of the state minimum building codes section or other local building codes.

The Second District Court of Appeal in Edward J. Seibert, AIA, Architect & Planner, P.A. v. Bayport Beach Beach & Tennis Club Ass'n, 573 So. 2d 889 (Fla. 2d DCA 1991), recently stated that violation of a building code could form the basis for tort liability against an architect. In Seibert, AIA, a condominium association sued, among others, an architect for various acts of alleged negligence and violation of the applicable building code with respect to design of the fire exit system. The association sought recovery for the costs of coming into compliance with the code. The court expressly held that the architect had a duty to design the fire exits in a manner that complied with the applicable building code, and failure to use due care in that regard would create liability. However, the architect here was not negligent. The architect used his professional judgment in interpreting the code, the building inspector approved of the design, and the architect relied upon such approval.

The Seibert, AIA case was decided under pre-Casa Clara law where a tort that was independent of or distinguishable from a contract could provide the basis for recovering purely economic losses. Casa Clara appears to suggest that any tort claim seeking recovery for purely economic damages is foreclosed. It is highly unlikely, however, that the Supreme Court meant to sweep so broadly; otherwise, well-established tort claims such as defamation, tortious interference, civil theft, and fraud in the inducement, to name a few, would be eliminated. The more logical view, thus, would also appear to be that negligence per se claims also survive Casa Clara. As stated in Sierra v. Allied Stores Corp., 538 So. 2d 943, 944 (Fla. 3d DCA 1989), section 553.84 of the Florida Building Codes Act creates an independent cause of action. The legislature enacted the standard minimum building code for the primary purpose of protecting the public safety, health and general welfare. Allowing a party to avoid the consequences of violating a safety regulation arguably contravenes the legislative purpose of section 553.84.

In summary, the law in the area of architect's liability in negligence for economic losses is by no means definitive. Considered as a whole, even though Casa Clara fails to shield them completely from liability in tort, architects are in a far better position than they were in prior to the decision. Architects, however, must be cognizant of the fact that the law is dynamic and constantly changing. Reliance on the current status of the law should never supplant the high standards of professionalism engendered by the American Institute of Architects.

Robert Alfert, Jr., Esquire, Assoc. AIA, is a trial attorney at the law firm of Broad & Cassel, a statewide general practice law firm. His primary area of practice is commercial litigation with a slant toward specializing in the representation of design professionals. He has an undergraduate degree in architecture and has practiced with various architectural firms prior to commencing his legal career.

The 1994 AIA Florida's Awards for Excellence in Architecture produced entries from all over the country. The recipients were selected from a jury made up of Charles Gwathmey, FAIA, James Stewart Polshek, FAIA, and Madeline Schwartzman. The jury members in the photo at right met in the New York City offices of James Stewart Polshek and selected the projects deemed worthy to receive the Awards for Excellence in Architecture.

The projects selected varied from residences, to corporate buildings, and included historic design projects.

The category of the Unbuilt Design Awards were selected by Carlos Zapata, Robert McCarter, AIA, and Christoph Gerozissis, who met at the Foundlings Club on Miami Beach. Two significant designs were selected for their unique design concepts.

The jury for the Firm Award and the Test of Time Award included Hugh Newell Jacobsen, FAIA, E. Fay Jones, FAIA, Jack Rogers, Diane Greer, Ellis Bullock, FAIA, and Linda Saulsena. This jury selected one project which best represented "timelessness in architecture."

The jury also selected the firm which sustained a standard of excellence worthy of the prestigious Firm Award.

This 120,000 sf office building and computer center is designed as a response to Hurricane Andrew. The client's corporate headquarters, damaged heavily in the winds, has been rebuilt to the same pre-storm standards, but the vulnerable activities have been extracted and protected in a new "bunker" building that is designed to protect the company's service to its clients in any eventuality.

The three-story building attaches to a thin projecting wing of the original building, and creates a small scale urban courtyard in the middle of its very suburban site. The courtyard provides a measure of extra light to the large floorplates, whose continuous glazing is only 18 inches high, to reduce to a minimum the amount of vulnerable glazed area. That narrow outside band of glass also bristles with projecting fins whose function is to encourage the perception that the building is vulnerable as much as it is actually to protect the glass from windborne projectiles.

Internally, the building displays a mix of systems furniture and enclosed glazed offices on the upper two floors, and a large, protected computer room and support spaces on the ground floor. The transition point between the existing building and the "bunker" is marked by a double-height bridged space that acts as a casual meeting space for the entire complex.

Jury: This is a very interesting office building because it has a strong planned graphic, with a central court space which serves as the entry. The articulation of the pieces seems consistent with the building's ethic in a minimal way and particularly appropriate to the Florida climate. The cantilevers on all four sides give a lot of control to the building."

The program for a large regional headquarters for a national insurance company called for an almost even distribution of space between administrative and support activities. These functions are segregated into two curving volumes facing an existing man-made lake. The lower two floors of the building comprise the more public departments which often interface with policy holders and support spaces including a cafeteria, clinic, fitness center, computer center, service wing with central plant, and a drive-in insurance claims unit.

The upper administrative floors are shaped into a bent bar stretching along the southern shore of the lake and set perpendicular to the interstate highway. The large open office areas of these floors are relieved by the sweeping bend of the bar itself and by the punctuation of the cores and lounges.

Photos by: HEDRICH-BLESSING/Nick Merrick

The materials used in the building relate to the peculiarities of the site and to the general conditions of the Florida climate. A taut precise curtain wall on the north is accentuated by vertical fins and a uniform sober precast wall organizes the facade, reinforces the building's horizontality and ties it to the horizon.

Jury: "For a corporate office building, this project is remarkably playful. From a distance, the building works almost as a graphic. There is a great sense of speed and energy in both the facade and the lobby."

This project involved the design of a new international corporate headquarters for a sportswear manufacturer whose products are licensed by the NFL, NBA, NHL, NCAA, and major league baseball. The 11-acre site included an existing pre-engineered metal building, parking and a retention area. The program called for 50,000 sf of office space adjacent to an existing manufacturing facility. Major program requirements were an atrium lobby, open office planning with 25 percent enclosed offices, meeting room to seat 125, a merchandise display area, and an executive suite with boardroom.

The client approached the architects with the goal of cosmetically improving the existing building while providing for growth for the next five years. The architects, in their search to establish their own goals for the building, established the direction that the design was to take.

The new building's parti consists of a three-story and a two-story wing separated by a linear atrium lobby. The atrium is an NCAA regulation length hardwood basketball court with point line and center jump. The receptionist's desk is a gigantic hockey puck complete with textured rubber face. The axis of the atrium is terminated by a shrine to television.

The glass walls of the office buildings are broken or penetrated by dug-out structures at the bridges, monumental stair, meeting room, and on the exterior by the service entities. The boardroom, or Owner's Skybox in the executive suite penetrates into the atrium at the third floor level. The front of the site is lit by sports light stanchions. The existing manufacturing building's front entry is maintained and marked by a "scoreboard/message center" that displays the latest sports scores.

Jury: "This is so terrific. Glass backboards and covered walkways. It is wonderfully well reasoned, but it took guts to do it. It proves that whimsy can play a major part in the design of a building without reducing it to cheap tricks".

The problem was to design a residence on a one-acre beach site with an access road from the east and an ocean view to the south. Zoning ordinances required that all living levels be elevated 14 feet above sea level, which, in this case, puts the first floor one full level above grade. The program reacts to the needs of a family of four with maid's quarters and the parti attempts to reinterpret the vernacular shingle style villa as a contemporary piece of architecture.

The plan is zoned from east to west to south in three articulated and modulated layers, made more dense and complex by the overlaid section manipulation. An infill element between zones punctures the house from east to west and is perceived on all four elevations. It also contains the stair cylinder which acts as a knuckle that rotates the organizing axis. The infill element continues through the house only to culminate outside the beach elevation with a shade box porch.

Photos by: George Cott / Chroma Inc.

The two-story living space acts to separate the north zone containing children's room and the south zone master suite on the top level. The three-dimensional manipulation of the form reacts to a wave action analogy with the concave and convex roof forms. This analogy is translated into plan by forming a series of courts and hierarchies beginning with a small koi pond at the entry, then a lap pool that wraps around the house and finally culminating in the Gulf.

Jury: "This piece of architecture seems well done. Consistency and ethic were merged and carefully thought about to produce an interesting residence".

The renovation of a two-story stucco and brick train station resulted in its adaptive reuse as an architecture office. The building was gutted and stripped with the original industrial steel window system left intact. The location of the freight elevator, the main entrance, and the existing wood stairs and mezzanine forced the circulation parti. A vertical parti was developed with the main working and drafting area accommodated by a loft and all principal and project manager's offices on the upper floor. Half a level below is a storage mezzanine and conference rooms, reception area, model shop, darkroom and restrooms are on the ground level.

The upper level is spatially rendered through the collision of horizontal and vertical datums. The horizontal is established by the Ybor City grid. An intermediary street is created within the space that is anchored by the drafting loft to the east and the principal's offices to the west. The vertical datum renders the "street" with the reception desks and file cubicles at four feet, the floor and storage "mass" at eight feet and the perpendicular planes to the ceiling at 12 feet. The horizontal and vertical layering thus becomes a reinforcement of the contextual grid.

The addition of the round steel stair on the south is a reaction to a railroad aesthetic which introduces the ideas of motion and speed.

Jury: "This renovation could easily have been overdone, but it was treated very artfully. It's not slick, but it was done with a lot of class. It's very modest".

This single-family residence employs wood frame construction with a stucco exterior. The grid seems clearly revealed in the exterior elevations, not only in the massing of the house, but in the fenestration. The interior, with its maple and ebony floors, is a perfect backdrop for architect-designed stair rails, window mullions and furnishings.

This project consists of ten buildings totalling approximately 140,000 square feet. The Job Corps program throughout the U.S. is involved in the training of disadvantaged young people who have been in trouble with the law. The program was developed so that these young people could be returned to society with skills enabling them to become part of the job force.

In designing this facility, very specific programmatic requirements faced the architects, including the incorporation of a prototype campus designed for Oklahoma and modified into a South Florida setting. As a response to site development issues, the campus was organized around two cores. The 'academic' campus and the 'residential' campus. The academic buildings are sited toward the front of the property while the residences are more privately situated. The recreational building is arranged so as to be a link between the two campuses.

The long classroom building located on the western edge of the site borders a residential neighborhood and reflects the scale and rhythm of the houses. The color palate used for the Center celebrates the diverse composition of the program's participants, the multicultural influences of the neighborhood and the South Florida climate and environment.

Jury: "This entire campus was apparently done on a minimal budget. The vocabulary of windows within planes is very strong and the views that are created across open spaces adds an interesting dimension to the project. The materials used were restrained, but very effective."

If you like Hardie siding, you'll love Hardisoffit™
Soffit and siding from James Hardie have the same masonry-like composition. A concrete reason why both can weather some of the most humid climates. No problem.

Looks like wood, acts like masonry

Hardie siding has all the advantages of wood, but none of the drawbacks. It has the look and warmth of wood and is installed in the same manner.

The more humid the better

Hardie siding and Hardisoffit™ have earned their reputations by standing up to humidity in places like Malaysia, where the humidity often reaches 90%. For comparison's sake, the average humidity of Southeastern U.S. is usually a mere 75%.*

Talk about coverage

James Hardie is a world leader in fiber cement technology with over 100 years experience. To date, billions of square feet of Hardie siding and Hardisoffit™ have been installed.

Another strike against wood

Hardie siding and Hardisoffit™ are non-combustible.<sup>2</sup> Their cementitious compositions make them some of the most fire-resistant building materials money can buy.

Siding and Soffit from James Hardie

The resilient building materials with the durability of concrete and the workability of wood.

You're looking at some of the most resilient siding and soffit materials ever developed.

Siding and soffit from James Hardie.

The remarkable lightweight masonry building products that have survived more than two decades in some of the most swelteringly unforgiving climactic conditions New Guinea, Malaysia, Australia and Indonesia have ever produced.

Now these rugged building materials are available Stateside.

Which means if Hardie siding and Hardisoffit™ can survive some of the most unbearably hot and humid climates on earth, you can safely assume they can make it through the summers in Key West, Florida.

Or Cape Cod, Massachusetts for that matter.

Let it blow

Hardie siding can be installed to withstand winds up to 130 mph! So if you're the least bit worried about gusty winds, don't be. Hardie siding can handle it.

Fear no termites

Hardie siding and Hardisoffit™ are warranted to withstand the ravages of even these treacherous vermin.

Subterranean termite
(Reticulitermes Flavipes)

This covers just about everything

Any products that can survive sweltering humidity, sizable termites and tremendous winds deserve a good warranty. Good reasons why Hardie siding and Hardisoffit™ come with a transferable, 50 Year Limited Product Warranty. Read the details and compare wherever the product is sold.

The design for this landfill operations and maintenance complex was derived from a "Z" section cut through a typical fill site and rotated to an "X-Y" position to produce the plan. "Cores" cut through the plan regulate, order, and provide rhythm to the owner's program. All program elements dealing with human waste and consumption are rotated to be perpendicular to the curved entrance wall's radius point. These elements, along with the "cores" demarcate the elements of the program which produced the need and function of the building. As the participant moves through the building and the architecture unfolds, the relationship between the participant's actions, production and waste and its consequences which produced the landfill is questioned.

Jury: "This is a very functional building with a design that fits the function. It reflects an evolving space and it has a special vitality. The curve is there with everything tight against it. The models are excellent expressions of the scheme."

Architect

Alfonso Architects, Inc.
Tampa, Florida

With the removal of Curtis Hixon Hall Convention Center in Tampa, the Museum of Art suddenly became very visible revealing a harsh nondescript entry facade. The Museum board viewed this as an opportunity to incorporate a 6,000 sf addition to the building. The reworking of circulation and gallery space was also mandated. This new addition not only meets current programmatic needs for a growing museum, but also provides a new facade for the current arts district which is being created in Tampa.

Consistent with the Arts District Masterplan, a new sculpture gallery plaza was designed as an infill between the dense geometric park to the south designed by landscape architect Dan Kiley, and the loose amorphic Alan Sonfest Design Park. The new sculpture plaza utilizes golden mean proportions and is cross-directional, reacting to a north-south datum of the two parks and reinforcing the Museum as a new foreground context on the east-west axis. The plaza thus serves as a critical infill element in the larger urban plan.

The design of the new museum addition is rendered as an urban block that has been carved and punctured, a container for art that is still in the process of revealing its contents. As each plane is carved and rotated, a process of distortion occurs.

Reflecting its function as a modern museum for art, the new additions and the plaza act as a receptacle from which the introduction of a new dialogue can begin.

Jury: "This gallery is ahead of its time. Within some fairly severe restraints, this structure has a lot of character. It represents a certain strong confidence. The free geometry and floating elements are very exciting, as is the subtle shifting of the pieces".

Architect

D.E. Holmes, FAIA
Tampa, Florida

This 1968 residence was designed by an architect for his family. The Tampa Bay area affords a near perfect semi-tropical environment that is characterized by moderate temperatures, bright sun, generous rainfall, and daily breezes from both Tampa Bay and the Gulf of Mexico. It seemed to the architect that it was particularly appropriate that this house be expressive of those regional characteristics.

Situated on a narrow site, the house looks out on an open bay to the east. Large oaks abound on the property, interspersed with a variety of palms and ferns. By placing the house well back on the site, complete privacy from the street was achieved and the solid masonry sidewalls provide visual screening from adjacent neighbors to the north and south.

Sliding glass doors stacked three-high as end walls make it possible to completely open the house to breezes and views. Adjustable redwood louvers provide necessary sun control and protection from tropical storms. Load-bearing sidewalls are concrete block left natural, as was the redwood, both for appearance and minimum maintenance.

In 1980, increased family size gave rise to the desire for an additional bedroom and for separation of dining area and family room. An eight-foot extension was made from the original masonry opening on the south wall and the original exterior wood louvers and sliding glass doors were relocated in the new east/west openings. On the ground floor, a new bedroom was provided and on the second level, a new dining area. The usable area of the kitchen was increased both visually and functionally by opening up the original south wall and installing a snack bar between the kitchen and the new dining room.

The Holmes House has received a number of design awards and has been published in both state and national publications including Architectural Record, and in books such as Houses Architects Design For Themselves and Twenty-Five Years of Record Houses.

1994 Firm of the Year - Carl Abbott FAIA Architect/Planners

Carl Abbott is one of the most highly recognized architects in Florida. He is particularly renowned for his creative exploration of architecture that is suited to the tropics.

The firm, Carl Abbott Architect AIA, was established in Sarasota in 1966. Recognition of his early residential work came in the form of a prestigious "Record House" award. From 1973 to 1977, the firm grew and the name was changed to Zoller/Abbott/Friedman Partnership. This period produced a series of large projects for commercial and institutional clients, including several housing developments. In 1977, Abbott returned to private practice with a focus on personal attention to the development of each project, from design through construction.

The 1980s brought national and international recognition to the firm. A series of residential projects including the Gregg Beach House, the Riverview Residence, and the Hicks Bayfront Residence, along with St. Thomas More Parish Center, received acclaim at many levels. The office also grew to its current six employees and an architectural retrospective of the firm's work was exhibited at the University of South Florida/New College.

Now in its 28th year, the Abbott firm continues to practice architecture and planning on a wide array of project types, with an increasing focus on large scale projects and international work. New explorations of technology in the potential of design association with large international firms, including Sir Norman Foster and Partners, promises a new global scale to this diverse and creative firm.

Wind and Windows

Hurricane Andrew was the driving force behind new building codes in Dade County, FL. Many other counties are following suit. As of September 1st, all new construction and renovation projects in Dade and Broward Counties must conform to new standards for windows, shutters, doors, and skylights. The reason for this is that most of the damage sustained by property owners during Hurricane Andrew was due to high winds penetrating the building envelope. More specifically, the internal pressures which resulted after windborne debris shattered glazed windows and doors caused roofs to blow off and walls to collapse.

This is the rationale behind Dade County's Large Missile Impact Test. Currently, shutters, windows, doors, and skylights must withstand two strikes by an 8 ft. long wood 2x4 traveling at 34 mph. The test also requires windows, shutters, doors, and skylights to be subjected to cyclic loading. In the case of windows, this means 9,000 inward and outward wind pressure cycles that simulate a hurricane wind flow against a building as the eye of the storm passes. doors and shutters are tested to 671 cycles.

Windows and skylights are also required to pass air and water infiltration tests.

Only products that pass rigorous tests and receive official product approval can now be sold in Dade and Broward Counties. Other Florida counties, such as Palm Beach County, are considering similar standards. In fact, the major code bodies are also involved. The Southern Building Code Congress (SBCCI), which covers all the Southeastern states, is reviewing the new standards and BOCA (Building Officials and Code Administrators International), which covers all the Northeastern states, has formally recognized the perils of windborne debris for the first time.

To date, several shutter manufacturers have passed the new Dade County codes. Only a few window manufacturers have passed the new Dade County codes. Only a few window manufacturers, however, have met the criteria....Many manufacturers of windows, shutters, doors, and skylights are scrambling now to get approvals on existing products and to develop new products. To date, most efforts have been directed at residential and other low-level building requirements. The real challenge comes with the need to glaze high-rise buildings in coastal locations. For those applications, the building codes require resistance to wind pressures as much as 5 times as great as wind pressures at ground levels.

If you want to take on a challenge, try to build, or even find a curtainwall or skylight system that will withstand the pressures created by a 400 mph wind.

In addition to government edicts, insurance companies are applying pressure directed at causing their policyholders to adopt the new hurricane protection standard. Some insurance companies are offering reduced premiums or deductibles if the policyholders show that they have provided protection for the building envelope "portals." This protection can be in the form of shutters or in the form of the new generation of high-strength windows/doors/skylights. Overglazing is an option too, i.e. placing new, high-strength glazings over (or inside of) the existing glazings.

The point is... the standards have risen dramatically, will continue to rise, and will almost certainly reach every municipality in Florida. Ultimately the entire Gulf Coast and Atlantic Coast will be affected. Now is the time to be prepared.

For more information on windows, glazings and other storm/security protection products, contact EXTECH at 305/776-2232 in Ft. Lauderdale, FL.

Save on Prescription Drugs with the AIA Trust Health Insurance Plans.

While congress and everybody else is talking about fixing the costs of health care, the AIA Trust is doing something about it. With the Caremark prescription drug program, participants in the Trust's plans pay no more than $12 for medicine, even for a three months supply! Designed for small firms and sole practitioners, plans include a preferred provider hospital network and optional dental coverage.

Using Outdated Documents Can Cause Embarrassing and Costly Missteps.

It's dangerous to use outdated AIA documents. As construction practices, trade customs, and responsibilities change, AIA documents are updated to reflect current procedures and clearly specify each person's responsibilities. They are designed to protect you and all the other parties to the contract; that's why they're widely recognized and used throughout the industry. Unauthorized copying of outdated documents is not only a misstep, it's also illegal.
